Ph.D. Thesis

- Title Feature Mismatch: Deponency in Indo-European Languages
Committee Jay Jasanoff (chair; Harvard), Sabine Iatridou (MIT), Jeremy Rau (Harvard), Isabelle Charneval (Harvard)
Description This thesis investigates the properties of deponents (verbs with non-active morphology, but active syntax) in several Indo-European languages, with a focus on Vedic Sanskrit, Greek, Hittite, and Latin. I argue that the “voice mismatch” behavior of deponents is rooted in the mechanics of the morphosyntax of Voice in these languages, with deponents introducing a non-canonical agent argument below Voice that triggers non-active morphology. I also reconstruct a number of proto-Indo-European deponents and discuss the consequences of reconstructing “mismatch verbs” for our understanding of the proto-Indo-European voice system.

M.A. Thesis

- Title The Vedic i-stems and internal derivation
Adviser Melanie Malzahn (Vienna)
Description This thesis collects all nominal stems in -(C)i- in the Rigveda and provides data on their metrical distribution, as well as an analysis of their synchronic function and diachronic development from proto-Indo-European.

Research interests

Comparative Indo-European linguistics, morphosyntax, morphological & syntactic theory, language change, diachronic syntax, reconstruction of Indo-European nominal and verbal morphology, diachrony of derivational categories, nominal compounding, Indo-Iranian nominal and verbal morphology, voice systems, argument structure, reflexivity in the Indo-European languages, verbal morphology of Greek, Latin, Hittite, Indo-Iranian.

Monographs

Forthcoming Deponency: a cross-linguistic perspective. Scheduled to appear with Cambridge University Press in 2020.
